Walking in the steps of giants

Those of you who have visited the Nevill recently will know of our commitment to offering high quality fast greens and smooth fairways. What most of you will not know is that our course has a rich heritage.

The course established in 1914 was originally a nine hole course set down by Willy Park Jnr. When the course was extended some years later James Braid was engaged to design the new holes and when he created the 2nd hole, some 550 yds, it was one of the longest holes around. Harry Colt worked with Braid in the late 19th Century and it is recorded that he spent time at the Nevill working with Braid.

Throughout the second world war part of the course was commandeered by the war office and the base of a gun emplacement can still be seen on our 8th fairway. On its return to the Club at the end of the war, Henry Cotton was commissioned to redesign and extend the course. Henry Cotton's layout is the basis of the course that exists today.

Willy Park jnr, Harry Colt, James Braid and Henry Cotton all giants of golfing architecture and giants in the game of golf.

Today we continue to strive to exceed expectations and would invite you to support our efforts on your visit to the club. We therefore, respectfully request that players are of a competent standard, adhere to club and course dress codes and course etiquette.

But ultimately, we should like you to enjoy your walk in the steps of giants...
